Human Development – Towards Bridging Inequalities

Anita Khemka/UNDP India

Millennium Development Goal:

Since the project focuses on developing capacities for local governance, it relates to all the Millennium Development Goals

Targets:

- All targets

Relevant India Development Goal:

All goals

Background

India has witnessed steady economic growth in recent years. According to the Global Human Development Report 2010, India is among the top ten performers in income growth. However, India's growth story is also marred by persistent hunger, malnutrition and mixed performance on human development indicators. Further, spatial and social disparities continue to challenge policymakers.

Building on past UNDP-Planning Commission collaboration on human development, the project aims to promote policy dialogue on human development in India based on evidence-based research and analysis backed by disaggregated data.

Objectives

The project focuses on providing innovative policy options for tackling issues of persistent exclusion, particularly at the state level and analyzing inequality, with particular attention to gender and social inequalities. This will be achieved through supporting preparation of the next round of state HDRs focusing on inequalities, state specific studies on inclusive and sustainable growth, and by focusing on advocacy and capacity development. The project addresses systemic gaps in statistical systems that result in lack of timely, reliable and comparable data which handicaps policy formulation and planning. Initiatives at the national level will provide an enabling framework for translating the human development agenda into action at the state level.
